

You suffered injury because of someone else's carelessness here in New York and now you're trying to decide which law firm and which lawyer is right for you. Is there a danger of going to a law firm that handles thousands of cases each and every year? You want to know the answer? Come join me as I share with you some great information. Hi, I'm Gerry Oginski. I'm a New York medical malpractice and personal injury trial lawyer practicing law here in the state of New York. The question is, is there a danger about going to a law firm that handles thousands of cases a year? The answer is there might be and let me share with you why. You need to ask every law firm you're considering "How many active cases do you handle in any one year?" Why is that important? Because you want to know how many cases each attorney handles. You want to know do you have paralegals handling these cases - who works these cases up? Is it the attorney? A junior attorney? Is it the trial attorney? That will help give you an understanding of what type of caseload each attorney is dealing with. And why is that important? Because if a law firm says "Hey, we give you personal attention and we're there for you, and we know everything about your case!" Well, if they're handling 500 cases at a time, how could they possibly know everything about your case? How could they possibly know everything that's going on with your particular case? The reality is that they can't. There's no way, if they're handling so many cases at one time, that they can be on top of and know exactly what's going on with your particular case. So the key for you is to ask before you ever go into an attorney's office, "Hey, what type of caseload do you guys handle? How many cases are assigned to the attorneys? How many cases are assigned to the paralegals? To the caseworkers?" And by the way, when I call the office, are they going to know exactly what's going on with my case or does somebody have to check the computer to find out exactly what happened with my case each and every day? So, why do I share this great information with you? I share it with you just to open your eyes, as you're choosing which attorney and which law firm is right for you, just to give you an insight and an understanding. You know, as always, if you have legal questions about your particular matter that happened here in New York and you're contemplating bringing a lawsuit, what I encourage you to do is pick up the phone and call me. I can answer your legal questions. This is something I do every single day and I'd love to chat with you.
